1. Tell me about Yourself, your family

The common question that you can expect at the time of the interview is Introduce Yourself. The interviewer expects you to provide a brief idea about your Family Details, Present and Past Educational Qualifications, Academic Achievements, Projects you have worked on, your hobbies and passion, etc. All these details have to be covered while you are telling about yourself. Make a note to grab the attention of the Interviewer with your confidence and your unique way of telling about yourself. Because first impressions or the best impressions.

2. What are your strengths and weaknesses?

Candidates have to talk about the things that they feel they are good at like Solving Problems quickly and efficiently is their strength, Adopting new things easily, Being Creative, these are some of the examples of strengths. When saying this is your strength don't forget to explain it with a real-life example that where your strength helped you to get better results. No person isn't without any flaws. Therefore, don't say that you don't have any weaknesses. If you are ambiguous about what to say as your weakness then you can convey one of your strengths as your weakness like "How you will be too focused on solving things that you forget about everything" this shows you as a dedicated person.

3. Tell me about a time when you faced criticism and how you responded.

Criticism is common in any field be it as a student or in the future as an employee, one will be facing a lot of criticism. Hence, do assume that criticism is a part of life and consider it in a positive way. So, respond to this question by saying how criticism has helped you to mold yourself and grow as an individual, and how it provided an opportunity to rectify your mistakes. The positive way you respond to this question reflects on how you take a setback and consider it as an opportunity to train yourself for your betterment. Copyright to:
